NO. 11.

The building which has cost too much may flourish and produce a good revenue until hard times come, or until it has competition in its neighborhood of buildings which have been built under economical management; then it loses ground rapidly and the owner has to content himself with the fact that the increase in land value is saving him from a loss; but the excess cost of the building is something that the owner has lost forever.

The owner who gets what is virtually a COST INSUR-ANCE policy on his construction work protects his investment against such an experience as that indicated above.
